A. alleges to have been "concealed" on his person, although the evidence, which we have been permitted to read, contains no proof whatever of any attempt at concealment on his part a circumstance which indicated the animus which dictated the article in question. Both the Captain and Doctor of the ship proved that the accused was a most inveterate opium-smoker, and that the quantity found on his person did not exceed his usual daily allowance, the Doctor adding that onless he had it regularly, his health would be considerably damaged: whilst A-boi, the Chinese constable and Government interpreter, proved that that quantity was often consumed in half-a-day by an

The law applicable to this case is Chap. 70 of the New Penal Code, the lat Sec. of which defines smuggling to be "the importation " * " of any goods, wares or merchandise subject to duty without paying that duty, or passing or attempting to pass through the Custom House any faise, forged or fraudulent invoice." The way in which the two offences are placed side by side, and indeed the whole context of the chapter, seem to indicate that the intention to defraud by evading payment of the duty is a necessary element in the offence as described in the section—as it is in other Statute offences.

The 33d Sec. enacts that the words " goods. wares or merchandise " used in that chapter shall be construed to include all "property of whatsoever kind and description," and the rigid enforcement of the law, as insisted on by the P. C. A., would necessarily render a passenger's watch, purse or pencil-case in his pocket (quite as much "concealed " as was the onium in the present case) and "property" as much liable to szare as the opium in the pocket of accused. The 28th Sec. enacts "that upon a sworn complaint a police or district justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the party charged with smuggling, and if on the examinatio he shall be of opinion that there is probable cause to believe upon the evidence produced that a conviction would take place before a jury, he shall commit the person for trial; and by the 29th Sec. full jurisdiction is given to the said justices to try and determine all cases of offences against the Revenue Laws when the ment have been disposed of either by amount of fine does not exceed $500, subject to sale or lease on terms which, as we may appeal to the higher courts; so that the accused say without exception, have been favor- has in all such cases the ultimate right to a jury able and satisfactory to those who have trial, and the duty of the Magistrate, as defined purchased or leased them.
